My Dear Sister,

Had you told me where Mr. Flaminio Browne lived possibly I might have sent a message to his house, in your Name. But, really, I have not had leisure to hunt out Dutchesses, and Lady Cecilias, to obtain the means of obeying your commands. I was concerned for Mr. Browne's death, because she was an old acquaintance, and a valuable woman, but, I never visited her, or her husband, since she married. Lady Cis, no longer lives in South Audley Street. She has sold that house, and removed to Wimpole Street, where I do not fatigue her with visits.

I believe the Definitive Treaty is arrived, and a Peace tomorrow has been announced in this evening's Gazette. As an old Courtier, you will know that the King did not use to hold one in this holiday week. There is likewise to be a Council, I expect the Official Notification of my new Dignity tomorrow Morning, and if it arrives in time, shall kiss the Kings hand at the Levee next week, I mean to go North, & as far as I know at present, my Miss will return with me. She was at the Lord Mayors Ball last night, was three hours on her progress to it, and had the satisfaction of having a Panel of the Carriage she was in, shattered to pieces. Providentially, there was nobody hurt by the accident.

With my best love to Mr.
Dickenson, Louisa, & my Countrywoman, I am, my

My Dear Sister,

Your Affectionate Brother

Harriet

Wednesday 21st April

I have this moment returned from kissing the Royal Paw, and now shall fill up my time till Dinner, in scribbling. Adieu.
