My Dear Sister,

Three days ago, I wrote you a long letter, and directed it to Leighton House, supposing that you would have been at home again, before this time. It will, of course, find you out. Yesterday your letter from Birch Hall arrived here. As to your Miss, I will never believe any reports of her illnesses, having been convinced, by ocular demonstration, of the absurdity of imagining that a person, so robust as she is, can be in danger from nervous complaints. Pray, don't let your old Women Doctors terrify you, for I say they are a parcel of geese. Mr. Dickenson Senr., I will not say so much for. At his time of life, a certain Event must be looked for. I trust, however, that Mr. D. Junr. will not suffer in his health from his attention to his Father. Adieu. All here join me in love and best wishes (although chiefly unknown) to you, and all your concern. Ever thy Dear Sister,

Your Affec^t. Brother
