

My dear Sir,

Ms. A. 1. 1. 4. 12. 28

There now remains but little to complete your work of friendship & compassion; it has indeed been bestowed upon one that I value more than all other human beings, & saying this the weight of my obligations is acknowledged. From regard to my dearest daughter I have endeavored, if possible to tranquillize my mind respecting Mr. Holman & to banish every rancorous sentiment, I have therefore written to him, & in answer to my letter I expect him here to morrow. I can not be wrong in my desire to forgive. Should he see what I have to propose in the light that I do, he will be much benefitted, & I shall be extremely gratified in being no longer at enmity with my daughters husband. The result of this meeting shall be communicated to you in my next. Mrs. Mann, in consequence of Mrs. Holman's request, has proposed to me to come to Bath, to deliver into my hands certain papers, & to communicate the sentiments & wishes of a dying friend. Knowing what Mrs. Mann has suffered from extreme affliction & bodily fatigue, & that she is at this time in a critical situation, I could not take upon myself to expose her to the chance of an untoward event, I have therefore written to her her this day desiring her to defer her visit till it might be safely undertaken in the mean time she will consult with you upon the arrangement of Mr. Holman's affairs, you can not have a more able assistant nor one in whom I have greater confidence; she is possessed of what were Mr. Holman's ideas & of mine which are the same should an agreement take place between me & Mr. Holman there will be no contest upon inferior objects I have no view but his interest, preserving myself at the same time from duplicity, but as he is extremely haughty & acts too much through the influence of passion, there is no knowing what turn things may take. After this experiment I shall consider myself in all respects acquitted. I have received a dear letter from Lady Frances Harpur, & one holds so from ^{the} charming L^{dy} Eliza Halliday they are both still unanswer'd. Mr. Rob^t Greville has notified to me his surprize & concern, as well as Lady Mansfield's that they had receiv'd no information of my daughter's illness previous to my daughter's death. I approve of the answer that was given adding that my daughter after having experienced a total neglect for so many years would have betray'd an abject mind by attempting to attract the notice of her relations in her last hours. She might excuse them for not giving her their patronage, but I assert that so excellent a mind could never merit contempt with my best regards to Mr. & Miss Dickenson. I remain my dear Sir your grateful humble Serv^{ant} Frederick Hamilton.

No. 1 Brock St. Bath

June 15th 1740

P.S. Pray inform me in your next how to direct to Dr. Whalley to whom I have been very negligent, grief & anxiety having absorbed my whole mind.

1810
19 JUL 19
E

Letter
Elix a.

John Dickenson Esq
No 49 Welbeck Street single London

10 June 1810
Dr. H. Smith

